By Tim Anderson

From Information Clearing House | Orignal Article

Reports that US and British aircraft carrying arms to the Islamic State group — better known as ISIS - have been shot down by Iraqi forces have been met with shock and denial in western countries. Few in the playing a 'double game' with its proxy armies in Syria, but some key myths remain important amongst the significantly more ignorant Western audiences.

A central myth is that overthrow the Syrian This claim became more against Syria shifted from terror'.

Washington now arms 'moderate Syrian rebels', to both Government and supposedly defeat the 'extremist rebels'. important in 2014, when the rationale of US aggression 'humanitarian intervention' to a renewal of Bush's 'war on

A distinct controversy is whether the al-Qaida-styled groups (especially Jabhat al-Nusra and ISIS) have been generated as a sort of organic reaction to the repeated US interventions, or whether they are actually paid agents of Washington.

Certainly, prominent ISIS leaders were held in US prisons. ISIS leader, Ibrahim al-Badri (aka Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi) is said to have been held for between one and two years at Camp Bucca in Iraq. In 2006, as al-Baghdadi and others were released, the Bush administration announced its plan for a 'New Middle East', a plan which would employ sectarian violence as part of a process of 'creative destruction' in the region.

According to Seymour House of 'moderate Sunni suraq brought about by the carry out clandestine operated. This brought the Saudis Hersh's 2007 article, 'The Redirection', the states', not least the Saudis, to 'contain' 2003 US invasion. These 'moderate Sunni' operations to weaken Iran and Hezbollah, key dis and Israel closer, as both fear Iran.

US would make the Shia gains in forces would enemies of While there have been claims that the ISIS 'caliph' al-Baghdadi is a CIA or Mossad trained agent, these have not yet been well backed up. There are certainly grounds for suspicion, but independent evidence is important, in the context of a supposed US 'war' against ISIS.

Not least are the admissions by senior US officials that key allies support the extremist group. In September 2014 General Martin Dempsey, head of the US military, told a Congressional hearing 'I know major Arab allies who fund [ISIS]'. Senator Lindsey Graham, of Armed Services Committee, responded with a justification, 'They fund them because the Free Syrian Army couldn't fight [Syrian President] Assad, they were trying to beat Assad'.

The next month, US Vice President Joe Biden went a step further, explaining that Turkey, Qatar, the UAE and Saudi Arabia 'were so determined to take down Assad ... they poured hundreds of millions of dollars and tens, thousands of tons of weapons into anyone who would fight against Assad ... [including] al-Nusra and alcoming from other parts of the world ... [and Qaida and extremist elements of jihadis then] this outfit called ISIL'. Biden's admissions sought to exempt the US from this innocent of sustained operations carried out operation, as though Washington were by its key allies. That is simply not credible.

Washington's relationship with the Saudis, as a divisive sectarian force in the region, in particular against Arab nationalism, goes back to the 1950s, when Winston Churchill introduced the Saudi King to President Eisenhower. At that time as a rival to President Nasser of Egypt. Washington wanted to set up the Saudi King More recently, British General Jonathan Shaw has acknowledged the contribution of Arabia's extremist ideology: 'This is a time bomb that, under the guise of Saudi Wahhabi Salafism is igniting under the world education. really. And it is funded by Saudi and Qatari money', Shaw said.

Other evidence undermines 'moderate rebels', now openly western attempts to maintain a distinction armed and trained by the US, and the

between the extremist groups Jabhat al-Nusra and ISIS. by the London-based, Muslim Human Rights), the absence of real cooperation and mergers of groups.

While there has indeed been some rivalry (emphasised Brotherhood-aligned, Syrian Observatory of ideological difference is best shown by the

As ISIS came from Iraq in 2013, its Syrian bases have generally remained in the far eastern part of Syria. However Jabhat al-Nusra (the official al-Qaida branch in Syria, from which ISIS split) has collaborated with Syrian Islamist groups in western Syria for several years. The genocidal slogan of the Syrian Islamists, 'Christians to to the Grave', reported many times in 2011 Beirut and Alawis from the Farouk al-Qaida groups. Farouk (once the largest Brigade, sat well with the 'Free Syrian ethnically cleansed many Christians and Army' group) indeed killed and Alawis.

Long term cooperation between these 'moderate rebels' and the foreign-led Jabhat al-Nusra has been seen around Daraa in the south, in Homs-Idlib, along the Aleppo. The words Jabhat al-Nusra actually Turkish border and in and around mean 'support front', that is, support for the Syrian Islamists. Back in December 2012, as Jabhat al-Nusra was banned in various countries, 29 of these groups reciprocated all Jabhat al-Nusra'. the solidarity in their declaration: 'We are

After the collapse of the 'Free Syrian Army' groups, cooperation between al-Nusra backed groups (Dawud, the Islamic Front, the and the newer US and Saudi helped draw attention to Israel's support Revolutionary Front and Harakat Hazm) Heights. Since 2013 there have been many for al-Nusra, around the occupied Golan reports of 'rebel' fighters, including those from al-Nusra, being treated in Israeli publicised his visit to wounded 'rebels' in hospitals. Prime Minister Netanyahu even early 2014. That led to a public 'thank you' from a Turkey-based 'rebel' leader, Badie (February 2014). Mohammed

The UN peacekeeping force observations of Israel's Defence Forces border. At the same time, Israeli arms have both Syria and Irag. In November 2014 protested against Israel's hospital support led to questions by the Israeli media, as to members of al-Nusra and Daesh [ISIS]'. A denial: 'In the past two years the Israel humanitarian, life-saving aid to wounded based in the occupied Golan has reported its 'interacting with' al-Nusra fighters at the been found with the extremist groups, in members of the Druze minority in the Golan for al-Nusra and ISIS fighters. This in turn whether 'Israel does, in fact, hospitalize military spokesman's reply was hardly a Defence Forces have been engaged in Syrians, irrespective of their identity.'

Syrian

The artificial distinction between 'rebel' and 'extremist' groups is mocked by multiple defections and transfer of weapons. In July 2014 one reports of large scale Brigade defected to ISIS in Ragga. In thousand armed men in the Dawud the Syrian Revolutionary Front were November defections to Jabhat al-Nusra from representative at the Gulf Cooperation reported. In December, Adib Al-Shishakli, Coalition', said 'opposition fighters' were Council of the exile 'Syrian National 'increasingly joining' ISIS 'for financial reasons'. In that same month, 'rebels' in the Israel-backed Golan area were reported as defecting to ISIS, which had by this time began to establish a presence in Syria's far south. Then, in early 2015, three thousand Hazzm' collapsed into Jabhat 'moderate rebels' from the US-backed 'Harakat taking a large stock of US arms including anti-tank weapons with them. al-Nusra.

ISIS already had US weapons by other means, in both Iraq and Syria, as reported in July, September and October 2014. At that time a 'non aggression pact' was reported in the southern area of Hajar al-Aswad between 'moderate rebels' and ISIS, as both recognised a common enemy in Syria: 'the Nussayri regime', a sectarian way of referring to supposedly apostate Muslims. Some reported ISIS had bought weapons from the 'rebels'.

In December 2014, there were western media reports of the US covert supply of heavy weapons to 'Syrian rebels' from Libya, and of Jabhat al-Nusra getting anti-tank weapons which had been supplied to Harakat Hazm. Video posted by al-Nusra showed these weapons being used to take over the Syrian military bases, Wadi Deif and Hamidiyeh, in Idlib province.

With 'major Arab allies' backing ISIS and substantial collaboration between US-armed 'moderate rebels' and ISIS, it is not such a logical stretch to suppose that the US and 'coalition' flights to ISIS areas (supposedly to 'degrade' the extremists) might have become covert supply lines. That is precisely what senior Iraqi sources began saying, in late 2014 and early 2015.

For example, as reported by both Iraqi and Iranian media, Iraqi MP Majid al-Ghraoui said in January that 'an American aircraft dropped a load of weapons and equipment to the ISIS group militants at the area of al-Dour in the province of Salahuddin'. Photos were published of ISIS retrieving the weapons. The US admitted the seizure but said this was a 'mistake'. In February Iraqi MP Hakem al-Zameli said the Iraqi army had shot down two British planes which were carrying weapons to ISIS in al-Anbar province. Again, photos were published of the wrecked planes. 'We have discovered weapons made in the US, European countries and Israel from the areas liberated from ISIL's control in Al-Baqdadi region', al-Zameli said.

The Al-Ahad news website quoted Head of Al-Anbar Provincial Council Khalaf supplied the ISIL terrorist organization Tarmouz saying that a US plane with arms province. Also in February an Iraqi militia and ammunition in Salahuddin called down a US Army helicopter carrying weapons Al-Hashad Al-Shabi said they had shot region in Al-Anbar province. Again, for the ISIL in the western parts of Al-Baqdadi were published. After that, Iraqi counter-terrorism forces were reported as having arrested 'four foreigners who were employed as military advisers to the ISIL fighters', three of whom were American and Israeli. So far the western media has avoided these stories altogether; they are very damaging to the broader western narrative.

In Libya, a key US collaborator in the overthrow of the Gaddafi government has announced himself the newly declared head of the 'Islamic State' in North Africa. Abdel Hakim Belhaj was held in US prisons for several years, then 'rendered' to Gaddafi's Libya, where he was wanted for terrorist acts. As former head of the al-Qaida-linked Libyan Islamic Fighting Group, then the Tripoli-based 'Libyan Dawn' group, Belhaj has been defended by Washington and praised by US Congressmen John McCain and Lindsey Graham.

Some image softening of the al-Qaida groups is underway. Jabhat al-Nusra is reported to be considering cutting ties to al-Qaida, to help sponsor Qatar boost their funding. Washington's Foreign Affairs magazine even published a survey claiming supportive of democracy'. After all the well published massacres that lacks credibility.

The Syrian Army is gradually reclaiming Aleppo, despite the hostile supply lines from Turkey, and southern Syria, in face of support for the sectarian groups from Jordan and Israel. The border with Lebanon is largely under Syrian Army and Hezbollah control. In the east, the Syrian Army and its local allies control most of campaign against Raqqa yet to come. The Hasaka and Deir e-Zour, with a final NATO-GCC attempt to overthrow the Syrian Government has failed.

Yet violent destabilization persists. Evidence of the covert relationship between Syria's Deputy Foreign Washington and ISIS is substantial and helps explain what ISIS. The extremist Minister Fayssal Mikdad calls Washington's 'cosmetic war' on group is a foothold Washington keeps in the region, weakening both Syria and Iraq. Their 'war' on ISIS is ineffective. Studies by Jane's Terrorism and Insurgent database show that ISIS attacks and killings in Iraq increased strongly after US air ground fighting has been carried out by the attacks began. The main on the Syrian Army and, more recently, the Iraqi armed forces with Iranian backing.

All this has been reported perversely in the western media. The same channels that celebrate the ISIS killing of Syrian soldiers also claim the Syrian Army is 'not fighting ISIS'. This alleged 'unwillingness' was part of the justification for US bombing inside Syria. While it is certainly the case that Syrian priorities have remained in the heavily populated west, local media reports make it clear that, 2014, the Syrian Arab Army has been the since at least the beginning of major force engaged with ISIS in Hasaka, Ragga and Deir eZour. A March 2015 Reuters report does concede that the Syrian Army recently killed two ISIS commanders (including Deeb Hedjian al-Otaibi) along with 24 fighters, at Hamadi Omar.

Closer cooperation between Iran, Iraq, Syria and Lebanon's Hezbollah is anathema to Israel, the Saudis and Washington, yet it is happening. This is not a sectarian divide but rather based on some clear mutual interests, not least putting an end to sectarian (takfiri) terrorism.

It was only logical that, in the Iraqi military's recent offensive on ISIS-held Tikrit, the Iranian military emerged as Iraq's main partner. Washington has been sidelined, causing consternation in the US media. General Qasem Suleimani, head of Iran's Quds Force is a leading player in the Tikrit operation. A decade after Washington's 'creative destruction' plans, designed to reduce Iranian influence in Iraq, an article in Foreign Policy magazine complains that Iran's influence is 'at its highest point in almost four centuries'.