U.S. President Donald Trump sacked his Navy secretary on Twitter. The main reason is that the Navy secretary did not follow Trump's advice regarding Navy Warfare Operator Edward Gallagher. Trump wanted Gallagher to retain his Special position as a Navy Seal. Gallagher was accused of stabbing to death a wounded State of Iraq and the Levant (ISIS) in 2017; fighter of the Islamic he was also accused of other incidents of murder (of a schoolgirl and an elderly man), and then 2019, a military court acquitted Gallagher of obstruction of justice. Court—which went into effect in 2002 but was drafted in 1998— defines war crimes as "serious violations of the laws and customs applicable in international armed conflict." These include attacks against civilians, attacks against those who have surrendered, attacks with biological and chemical weapons, and attacks against medical and cultural institutions.

TheRome Statute builds on 100 years of legalprecedent established in theGenevaConventions and the Hague Conventions. Thereis no ambiguity in theStatute, which shouldbe read by schoolchildren in countries thatare prone toprosecute wars.

The U.S. was not going to play nice. Not long thereafter, in April 2019, the ICC said that it would not go ahead with a against the United States, or indeed against war crimes case any of the belligerents in Afghanistan. The Court said it would "not serve the interests of justice" to pursue this investigation.

Trump responded to this decision by calling the ICC "illegitimate" and—at the same time—that the ICC's judgment was "a victory, not only for these patriots, but for the rule of law."
